A registry should have the following characteristics: flexibility, accessibility, security and confidentiality of the data. The active role that health professionals can play has been demonstrated: they provide proper immunisation advice, which reduces rejection due to ignorance, fear or the belief that the vaccine is dispensable [24,25,26].

Rotator Cuff Pathology in the Older Active Patient

Rotator cuff pathology management should further be guided by the biology of the tissue and its healability rather than reparability. While conservative management is appropriate in some, surgical interventions can provide distinct advantages and has proven to be successful in patients of advancing age. In this chapter we discuss the natural history, pathophysiology, treatment options and outcomes in the management of rotator cuff disease in patients older than 65 years of age.
